

I am writing as a concerned citizen in support of the current restrictions on broadcast ownership. It is clearly in the best interests of the public for there to be diversified ownership of media outlets. This is increasingly important in the "information age" of today.

As highlighted on Bill Moyers NOW program on public television, there is an increasing perception that the FCC is more responsive to industry lobbying than to the public interest. It's ironic that this type of show would likely not have been shown on media outlets owned by the major media conglomerates, which would not want to offend the FCC.

Most Americans are rightfully fearful of the increasing consolidation of ownership of media outlets and therefore the FCC should continue to restrict further consolidation.
